1 Some expressions describe people who are important, or who at least think they are. (①) One such expression is bigwig. In the seventeenth century, important men in Europe began to wear false hair, called wigs. As years passed, wigs began to get bigger. (②) The size of a man's wig depended on how important he was. The more important he was — or thought he was — the bigger the wig he wore. Some wigs were so large they covered a man's shoulders or back. (③) Today, the expression bigwig is used to make fun of a person who feels important. People never tell someone he is a bigwig. (④)

2 Big wheel is another way to describe an important person. A big wheel may be the head of a company, a political leader, a famous movie star. They are big wheels because they are powerful. What they do affects many people. Big wheels give the orders. Other people carry them out. As in many machines, a big wheel makes the little wheels turn. Big wheel became a popular expression after World War Two. It probably comes from an expression used for many years by people who fix parts of cars and trucks. They said a person rolled a big wheel if he was important and had influence.

3 The top of something is the highest part. So it is not surprising that top is part of another expression that describes an important person. The expression is top banana. A top banana is the leading person in a comedy show. The funniest comedian is called the top banana. The next is second banana. Why a banana? A comedy act in earlier days often included a part where one of the comedians would hit the others over the head with a soft object. The object was shaped like the yellow fruit: the banana. Top banana still is used mainly in show business. Yet the expression can also be used to describe the top person in any area.

4 A kingpin is another word for an important person. The expression comes from the game of bowling. The kingpin is the number one pin. If hit correctly with the bowling ball, the kingpin will make all the other nine pins fall. And that is the object of the game. So, the most important person in a project or business is the kingpin. If the kingpin is removed, the business or project is likely to fail. Kingpin is often used to describe an important criminal, or the leader of a criminal gang. A newspaper may report, for example, that police have arrested the suspected kingpin of a car-stealing operation.

2 次の英文を読んで、問1-5の解答として最も適切なものを、それぞれ(A)-(D)から1つずつ選びなさい。

Last week we asked our readers to complete an online survey about work and jobs. Surprisingly, over 1,000 of you responded, and we can now reveal the findings.

The most fascinating result was that almost all of you are currently working—in fact, over 89%. Contrary to popular thought, the likelihood of finding employment did not increase with more education. High school graduates who contacted us were just as likely to have a job as respondents with Master’s degrees. Not only that, but 95% of people working said that they were satisfied with their jobs.

However, job satisfaction, it seems, does not lead to complacency. Over 50% of you, regardless of whether or not you had a job, said that you had searched for work in the past six months. Our survey also had a question regarding the reasons for doing a job search, and the most popular reason was “higher pay,” followed by “better work environment” and, thirdly, “less commuting time.”

When those with jobs were asked how their current job was found, the number one response was “networking,” while “ConnektIn.com” claimed the second spot, and “classifieds” actually came in fifth. It seems traditional methods of finding work no longer apply in today’s job market.
