LAWP160	Academic Foundation for PHR I	The Academic Foundation for Peace and Human Rights course will help students improve their general English language skills with the aim of taking the IELTS Test (IBT). This course is designed for students who do not simply wish to study for a test but are also interested in exploring and learning about peace, human rights, and environment issues. After completing the course, students will be more familiar with the test format, the necessary time-management, and strategies needed to improve their scores while also improving their ability to discuss peace and human rights issues in English. Note that this is the first year for this course so the contents of each class may be adjusted as the course progresses.	2	1
LAWP162	Academic Foundation for PHR II	The Academic Foundation for Peace and Human Rights course will help students improve their general English language skills while exploring and learning about peace, human rights, and environment issues. Since the content is taught entirely in English, students will get a sense of what it is like to be studying in a foreign country. The contents of each class may be adjusted as the course progresses depending on the abilities of the students.	2	1
LAWP161	AF Tutorial I	The Tutorial for the Academic Foundation for Peace and Human Rights course will help students gain knowledge and become more aware of issues relating to peace, human rights, and the environment while also improving their general English language skills. This course is designed for students who do not simply wish to study for a test but are also interested in exploring and learning about significant issues. Note that the specific contents of the course may be adjusted as the seminar progresses in accordance with the student's level or to accommodate topical events.	1	1
LAWP163	AF Tutorial II	The Tutorial for the Academic Foundation for Peace and Human Rights course will help students gain knowledge and become more aware of issues relating to peace, human rights, and the environment while improving their general English language skills. GSOC192	Introduction to International Relations	This course is an introduction to the causes and nature of Regional integration. The topic is presented from a historical, social scientific and normative perspective: We critically examine various theories of, and current debates about European and Regional integration by studying the process of integration, its effects and its constitutional character. At the end of the course you will have some insight into the theoretical explanations of integration; a closer understanding of the core issues in the EU as well as its structural working; you will also gain some knowledge how to compare the EU integration process with other attempts of regional integration.	2	1~4
GSOC193	Political Science	This course will introduce basic themes and concepts central to the study of political theory and political philosophy The central aim of the course is to make sense of the idea of political authority within a society of free and equal citizens. To do so requires examining the kinds of justification available for supporting the modern political state. Classes will consist of short lectures coupled with group discussion and student presentations. This course will be of interest to students of philosophy, political science and anyone interested in politics more generally.	2	1~4
