4 次の英文を読んで、下の問1～8に答えなさい。

A pod of dolphins saved a group of swimmers from a great white shark off the northern coast of New Zealand.

The incident happened when lifeguard Rob Howes took his 15-year-old daughter and two of her friends swimming near the town of Whangarei, according to the newspaper.

Mr. Howes told the newspaper that the dolphins appeared and pushed all four of them together by doing tight circles around them. He explained that, when he had attempted to break away from the protective group, two of the bigger dolphins forced him back.

He then saw what he described as a three-meter great white shark cruising toward them, but it appeared to be repelled by the ring of dolphins and swam away.

"It was only about two meters away from me, the water was crystal clear, and it was as clear as the nose on my face," he said. At that point, he realized that the dolphins "had corralled us up to protect us".

Another lifeguard, Matt Fleet, who was in a lifeboat, saw the dolphins circling the swimmers and slapping their tails on the water to keep ³⁵them in place.

Expert Ingrid Visser, who has been studying marine mammals for 14 years, told the newspaper that there had been reports from around the world about dolphins protecting swimmers.

She said that, in this case, the dolphins probably sensed the humans were in danger and to protect them.

Ms. Visser, of the group Orca Research, said dolphins would attack sharks to protect themselves and their young.
